Read the passage and answer questions 36–40.

Every summer, I spend two weeks in my grandparents' village. The roads are narrower than those in my city, but the air is cleaner. My grandfather grows vegetables and takes them to the local market every Saturday. He usually leaves home at six o'clock because customers arrive early. Last summer, I helped him arrange the vegetables. The work was tiring, yet I enjoyed meeting friendly neighbours. I also noticed that many villagers now use smartphones to sell farm products online. They can reach customers in nearby towns without travelling far. My grandmother says village life is changing, but people still help one another when someone has a problem. To me, that sense of community is the best thing about the countryside.
